Discussion

- This analysis is to provide an overview for a location for opening a restaurant in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. This report has focus mainly on DownTown Toronto borough since it is highly populated area.
- Nevertheless, this analysis will not recommend a specific neighbourhood within DownTown Toronto.
- Let's make some assumptions. Assumption 1:
 - Assume one would like to open a Chinese restaurant. One could have a look at the above data that have been presented, and look for neighbourhood that current do not have many or don't have a Chinese restaurant at all.
 - For example, places like Berczy Park, Christie, Commerce Court, and many others which do not have Chinese restaurant in their top 20. Figure below just extracting 2 neighbourhoods for reference.
 - It would mean that there is less competition in these areas, and it may be a good idea to provide a new variety of food type to the customer in this area.

Discussion:

- Assumption 2:
- One still thinking of the type of food of his new restaurant. Again, we could take a look at the data presented. German restaurant may be an option to explore since German restaurant type has not been found in any of these neighbourhood (except St. James Town). Please refer to previous slides for statistics of data presented.

- In this study, the report analyse the neighbourhoods within the DownTown Toronto. And subsequently, the number of food categories that have been established in each neighbourhood.
- It is aimed to provide an overview for one to have a understanding of the current food types available and hoping this would help one to do a preliminary decision on its location and restaurant type.
